

A KOKOPELLIMA PRESS BOOK

Eutaxis /grievechronic\. Book one by Angel Brynner.

"Artyo Jaymes is one of them. The walking wounded- Survivors of a 21st century media- induced child abuse epidemic that all but cannibalized her generation. After almost becoming a statistic she'd gone underground, forgiving unspeakable things for her own sanity. But when her past comes for her she is drawn 'home' to do the unthinkable: Settle the score once and for all, in a way that will set hell on Earth ablaze and never be forgotten.

When an established order prospers due to things done to its weakest in the dark, getting away will not be enough."

“...within your children lay my judgement against you.”

Even in breaking out of hell there are pockets of respite that can life-raft you towards your destiny. Way-stations, wonderful altars in the wild, asylums crammed full of Adaptives, Awares, Latents-AWOLs, POWs and Moles- broken, still spiritually buried underground yet freed by a dawning truth:

The new, numbed out normal exists in no light.

...Things that happened "to" you can also end "through" you, for the greater good of all. But how do you fight a machine designed to blank while baby-sitting in the absence of love?

Penetrate the bigger picture. Eradicate the virus via the door it first came through, even if that door in is a signal broadcast to numb targets into consumptive compliance. Use the nature of the machine to bring it to its knees.

The score is not settled until the walls fall down and the captives are set free. And the walls won't fall until the hands go up. Grieve- chronic celebration or global inoculation? "It happened to everyone"? It is now our battle cry.

The truth will set you free.

Erebus. Where hope is dragged to die a ruthless death. A particular shade of Hades just under the surface of Earth, sometimes as close as right beneath the skin as we live and breathe. It's the haggard truth behind picket fences, buried under prize-winning rose bushes. Brightest when your spirit is closest to wanting to die, wildest when the blood starts to go cold. It is the seat of all the negatives, the home of every nefarious intent that hounds you...the ghostly whispers of demons saying they are you. It's not nature versus nurture, never was. And it'll hack Jacob's ladder to bits if you let it. It's the hell no one knows you had to take to get to where you barely are. We all have it. Many live or die by it. But most? In it. Because it is also the only way out. What is swept under the rug will rise up. Enjoy the escape velocity.
